

Heber, Daniels Fighting Runoff

The rain continued falling outside Will Sweatfield's Wasatch High School classroom Wednesday. But the 16-year-old high school student wasn't there.

With the rain falling on his head at the Heber City shops, he said: "I've been here since noon."

He spoke during a short reprise from the backbreaking work of filling sandbags.

Sweatfield, Earl Ferguson and other students were dismissed from school Wednesday to fill and heft sandbags into flood barriers. The heavy sandbags were used to divert rising and destructive floodwaters away from their neighbor's property.

The sandbags had turned Center Street into a river and protected some homes from flooding. As the students worked, rain poured down their faces and turned the soil under their feet to mud.

"It's not so bad, I've done it so many times before, I'm used to it." Sweatfield added that he had fought floods three years earlier.

Sixteen-year-old Earl Ferguson said he was in class when the principal at Wasatch High School announced that he and his school-mates were needed to help battle the flooding adults had been concerned with since morning.

"It was around 11:30 p.m. when Mr. Larsen announced that we were needed," said Ferguson.

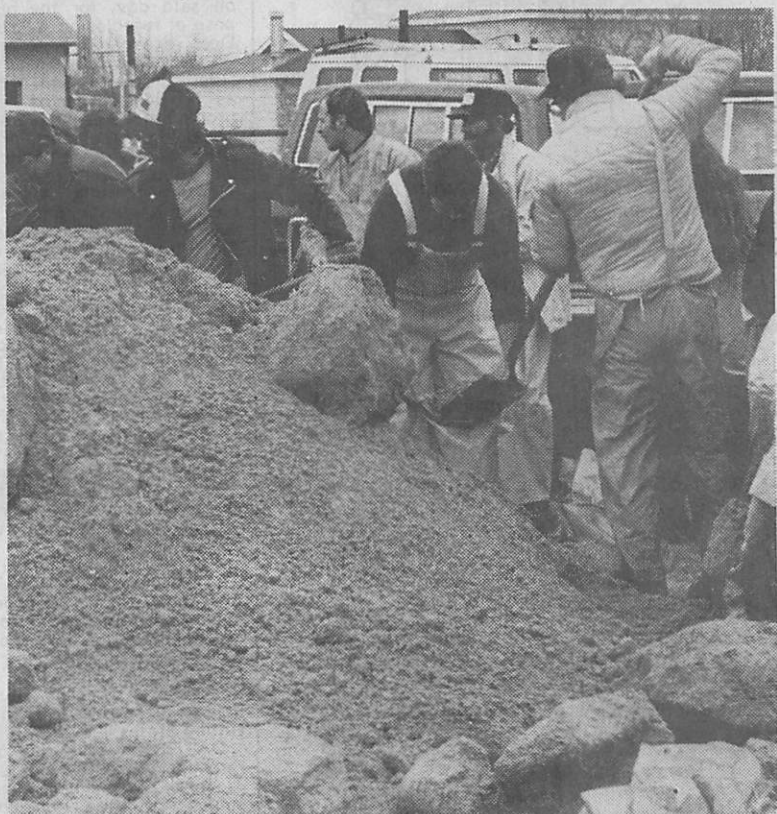

A couple years earlier he had helped sandbag during flooding near Soldier Creek, he said.

"We had flooding it seems for about the last two years," said Lance Higgs, a Heber public works employee, who drove the dumptruck that supplied sand to workers who filled sandbags.

"This is my seventh load," said Higgs. It was still early in the afternoon when he made the hasty estimate that the seven loads would fill about 3,000 sandbags. At that point, his work had just begun.

Sandbagging was wet work. A half a block north on Main Street, near Center Street, students waded in knee-deep water, placing two pickup truck loads of sandbags along the sidewalk where water threaten to flood a business if the water rose much more. As another pickup truck crept north on 100 East, students walked behind it dropping the heavy sandbags in a neat line that helped divert water down the street away from the back of businesses.

One unidentified adult praised the work of the students and said, "I bet there is going to be a lot of tired students in class tomorrow."

Wasatch County schools cancelled school Wednesday to help fill sandbags.
